

About Us

Class and Status is a biannual, peer-reviewed journal that promotes critical thinking in the social sciences and humanities. The journal focuses on the study of social divisions, their making, maintenance, and reproduction. These principal issues have been significantly overlooked; and in the process of a series of methodological abstractions, functional or consensual accounts and mainstream public policies, the framework and the meanings attached to social divisions have been squeezed out. The main scope of the journal is to revitalize scientific discourse along these lines. Class and Status aims to advance theoretical and empirical knowledge, to open new dialogues, and to broaden the horizons of social research on the issues above.
